"I didn't do all the little things I need to do correctly to post good scores and put myself in position to shoot good scores," Woods said.

Woods emphasized when the week began his body requires more recovery time than in his youthful prime. But he doesn't expect too much more for a full recovery.

"There's no reason why I can't get up to speed again and crank it back up," he said. "I've got to start feeling a little bit better first before that happens."

The next major opportunity for Woods will be next month's US Open at Pebble Beach, where Woods won the 2000 US Open to launch a run of four major wins in a row. He's likely to play the Memorial, hosted by Jack Nicklaus, ahead of the US Open.

But first, some rest to get back to a mental and physical peak.

"We'll do that first and then start cranking it back up again," Woods said.

"I just wasn't moving the way I needed to. That's the way it goes. There's going to be days and weeks where it's just not going to work, and today was one of those days."
